Still Plugging Away - Introduction

Hi. I'm Steve Comstock and this is "Still Plugging Away", a series of videos for those of us beyond retirment, about creating and maintaining websites using free tools from the Windows operating system.

If you need to create or maintain a website to support a new business you're starting, or a non-profit organization, or to expand your interest in a hobby (travel, for example, or collecting items), the information in these video sessions can help you get started.

I like to accomplish complex tasks using simple tools and techniques wherever possible. So the main course here is about using Notepad, the free text editor that comes with included with Windows, to create websites to support your goals.

If you need to first get comfortable with Notepad and / or Windows in general, you probably will want to start with the first course, "Practical Windows for Small Business".

The third course, "Advanced Topics in Website Coding" is a series of talks about techniques that I have found useful to enhance my websites. Since I'm always thinking of new things I'd like to do, this series of videos is expected to continue expanding over time.

You can watch these videos for free on my YouTube channel, although there are ads at the beginning of each one.

Or you can watch the videos in the context of my website for these series, StillPluggingAway.com

On the website, the first video in each course is free, but there is a slight charge for viewing the later sessions. However you get these advantages:

* no ads

* you have access to a transcript of each video

* there is some additional commentary on the web page for each video session

* for the coding courses you have access to starter files and test data for the labs

So there you have it! Enjoy!
